

Patriot Front: A critique from the Right

A lesson in what not to do with a political group.

Patriot Front, over the past few years, has made quite a name for itself. Its sort of funny, because I remember when they first began, so watching events unfold has been an interesting experience. For those who don't know me well, I am highly critical of Patriot Front. I have a general policy to not counter signal other WN or RW organizations, but it still feels necessary to criticize perceived failures in order to not make similar mistakes & grow as a movement.

Patriot Front is probably the most well known "Fascist" group in the U.S. They'll often pop up on Twitter after a march or something, so they're fairly well known compared to other dissident groups. PF likes using this to give themselves credit, but in reality they're not that big. They just made headlines once or twice & got called feds by big Con Inc. accounts.

So, why am I against PF? Well, to start out with, no they're not feds. Wearing a mask & not being a fat fuck doesn't make a group feds. If you don't understand the necessity of wearing a mask, or think lardasses should be involved in any RW activism, kill yourself immediately. Further, I have some personal beef with Tommy Rousseau & PF stemming from my days in Atomwaffen Division & later the general accelerationist sphere. The whole mass movement focused wing of the FarRight has always had a bone to pick with the IronMarch crowd because we knew their opticscucking was bullshit. These personal issues include a senior PF leader beating his girlfriend for being friends with an AWD member, childish rants directed towards us, & PF threatening to sue The American Futurist (former AWD members) who they blamed for putting up edgy knock off PF posters. I will, however, try to put this personal beef aside for this article.

To start out, a brief history lesson. Patriot Front was born out of the shit show that was Charlottesville. Tommy was originally a member of a group called Vanguard America, which became infamous because James Fields (challenger driver that killed that fat bitch) was photographed with a Vanguard America logo on his shield. I don't think he was actually a member, but VA members were basically handing these shields out to everyone to inflate their size. Clearly that gambit didn't play out well. After Charlottesville, most of these AltRight types realized they were retarded & either pushed further Right or left dissident politics. Not Tommy though, he splintered from VA & created PF, which is really the only AltRight style group still around. The early days of PF are fairly uneventful, because they basically did the same thing for the last 6 years. Walk around with flags & do get together at the park.

The inspiration for this article is the below post:

The iFunny chuds might recognize this because it was copy & pasted by PFSightings.

Since this is their defensive post, let's pick it apart. Numbers 1 & 2 I'm going to ignore because no serious politically involved person makes those claims, only centrists & do nothings. It's funny that they claim Charlottesville was some unorganized mob, because anyone with half a brain cell can tell it was a bunch of groups that functioned identically to PF: Trad Workers Party, Renaissance Party, Identity Evropa, Vanguard America, etc. These were all virtually identical in concept to Patriot Front. The only thing he could mean, assuming he isn't just outright lying (he is), is that he would prefer all these activists be under a single group. This would make sense if Vanguard America (again, PF's direct predecessor) wasn't the worst people out there. The NSM handled themselves better.

If you're wondering what "racist anarchism" means, he's referring to the more local, decentralized nature that the movement has shifted to in the wake of events like Charlottesville & the AWD crackdown. Meaning, he's against the natural & logical steps people took in order to adapt to a changing political landscape & increasingly hostile government. The entire point of these actions was that a local group of 5 to 20 people are both a million times safer & more effective because they don't have to worry about large scale nonsense like having 100 members spread across the whole country. More on this later.

As for their ideology, it's stupid. I'll simply ask you to go to their website & read it yourself. It's intentionally vague & ultimately says nothing at all, other than that they support the "real America" that our founders envisioned. They don't have any real policy or plans, just a general sense of radical conservatism. Effectively a slightly more radical version of the Nick Fuentes crowd believes.

That aside, what's their actual goal? The goal of any political organization can be split into three categories. Firstly, to gain electoral power at some level. Secondly, to spread their ideas & try to affect the bigger parties. Thirdly, some sort of militant tactic.

PF obviously isn't a militant group, to the point where they do not carry weapons & have banned members from their official Discord server for even discussing completely legal firearm topics. They hate militantism. On the first point, PF has never had more than maybe 200ish members at any given time. They aren't winning any elections, especially in America's two party system. Which leaves the second point.

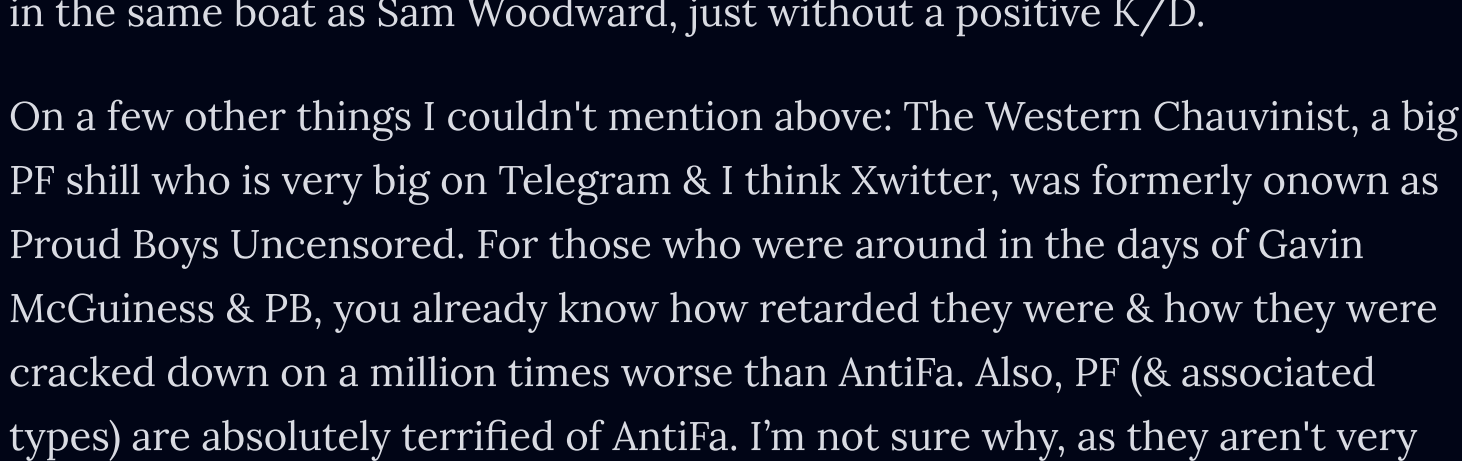

This tactic was actually pioneered in Western Europe way back in the 60's, by what's known as the New Right. The goal of the New Right was not to gain mass support, but simply influence the political landscape by way of metapolitics. These types generally weren't hardcore fascists or NS, but often enjoyed the works of Julius Evola or Giovanni Gentile. They were generally unsuccessful, but are the reason a lot of the hard right parties in Europe are successful today, like AfD & RN. This was also the basis of the AltRight, to influence the Republican Party by pulling the overton window to the right via memes & protests. This is why Trump's election in 2016 was often blamed on the AltRight by MSM & the Dems. The America First crowd claims the same tactic.

The issue is, this wasn't carried out by a group. It was carried out essentially by an unorganized mob based online (mainly 4chan) & invigorated by the CamerGate & whole anti-SJW craze in the preceding years. Patriot Front has made absolutely zero impact on the mainstream RW. You can tell because the mainstream has done nothing but laugh at them & call them feds. In many respects, regular MAGA types have actually become more radical than PF. At least they usually bring rifles to their protests. This is because the opticscuckery has become absolutely pathological in PF. Basically any symbol that's vaguely NS is banned, no Roman salutes, no slurs, no weapons. TRA-PF, a meme group that puts up fake PF posters calling for TND & adding Swastikas to their stickers, has pissed them off so much they threatened to sue TAF who wasn't even involved. Its actually pretty funny to watch.

But in all seriousness, all this optics cucking has gotten PF no where. No one actually knows what they're pushing for because all they do is walk around with American flags in formation. There's no way for the layman to discern them from a standard Conservative group, or a boys scouts troop for that matter. So, they aren't influencing anything. Which leaves them with absolutely nothing to show for.

Bear in mind, PFs membership is roughly the same size as Atomwaffen Division. By far the most extreme NS group in US history garnered the same amount of support, plus several international off shoots. On that, they usually claim their marches are for exposure. Meaning, they do a march & the local media will report on it thus giving them free publicity. Generally, this makes sense. The issue is, my old AWD cell (6 dudes btw) got way more media attention by putting up edgy posters on a University Campus. This action took 20 minutes & was done out of boredom on a random night. What's the point of organizing a giant march if you're going to get the same results as a bunch of retards putting up printer paper?

Further, PF doesn't even really benefit from this optics nonsense. See below image:

This is a document the FBI released several months ago about PF. Yeah, they see PF as essentially the same as AWD. I guess WLP was right about PF. Even the diversity hires making the FBI incompetent, because this is retarded. But it is how the system sees pro-White groups. Whether you walk around with a flag or make bomb threats to the local ADL office, it ultimately doesn't matter. You'll be treated the same. On that note, things like stickers & banner drops aren't legal. You can be charged with a federal hate crime for it. So if you think you're safe from going to jail because PF is so peaceful, you're wrong. You'll be in the same boat as Sam Woodward, just without a positive K/D.

On a few other things I couldn't mention above: The Western Chauvinist, a big PF shill who is very big on Telegram & I think Twitter, was formerly known as Proud Boys Uncensored. For those who were around in the days of Gavin McGuiness & PB, you already know how retarded they were & how they were cracked down on a million times worse than Antifa. Also, PF (8 associated types) are absolutely terrified of Antifa. I'm not sure why, as they aren't very threatening & no one reads the doxxes on UnicornRiot or Twitter. I would know, I have been doxxed & physically confronted by them before. They'll try and take a picture of you but are always too fat or frail to actually start anything. I'm not sure where the fear of Antifa comes from, maybe the old Battle of Berkley days or something. PF also has very sketchy privacy issues. Their private servers have been compromised multiple times. Also, they have a tendency to straight up due some gay version of espionage on prospective members like scoping out their house & questioning them on family members/significant others to see if they're potentially hostile or something. Odd stuff.

Now, is there a right way to do what PF is attempting? Sort of, but it doesn't involve gay uniforms & optics cucking. I would be doing a disservice to prospective activists to shit on a major organization without providing some theoretical & real alternatives.

Firstly, on the matter of influencing mainstream politics. In the early 1950's, West Germany had an event known as the Naumann Affair. I'd recommend looking into it yourself, it's actually pretty interesting. But the gist is that a bunch of ex-NSDAP members wanted to quietly reassert themselves in politics by joining centre-right political parties & gradually shifting their aims. The plan amounted to undercover Nazis getting elected via moderate positions & proceeding to use this power to reassert NS in West Germany. The plan probably would've gone pretty well if they weren't caught by the British MI6, as this was only a couple years after the Allied occupation ended. Unfortunately, while the CIA was busy recruiting ex-Nazis the British were still a bit jumpy. The takeaway is that it's possible to plant people into major parties (not necessarily as elected officials but rather party officials) to assist your goals, but in today's environment it's vital that they have absolutely no provable ties to any dissident politics. The time of David Duke types taking power is over, look up Judd Blevins for proof. Trying to do this from the outside is idiotic because you're just going to be seen as an outsider.

Now that theory talk is out of the way, where should prospective activists go to network & try to make a difference? Firstly, White Lives Matter. They are active in basically every state & most Euro countries. They do a lot of stickers, posters, banners, protests, etc. Highly recommend for younger dudes who want a foot in the door of the movement. DM me & I will send you the info for the nearest WLM group. These are completely decentralized & local, so you will be generally safe & within your own community instead of traveling cross country for some lame march.

Nextly, my personal favorite non-militant group, NSC-ISI (and their more legal counterpart the People's Initiative of New England) is a fairly well known group based in New England. They've done a lot of stuff aimed at lefties, including lighting flares & causing a ruckus outside the MA governors house. They were potentially too silly &/or goofy so the states of NH & MA are waging hard lawfare against them. Regardless, they're the perfect blend of localism, being violent enough to be scary without being labeled a terror group, & being active in local politics by speaking at town halls & such. I think any WN group that doesn't have a militant focus should be modeled after NSC. They also call in fake membership applications to PF & beat up the dude that comes out, which is super funny. If you haven't gathered, PF has pissed off basically everyone in the movement at some point or another.

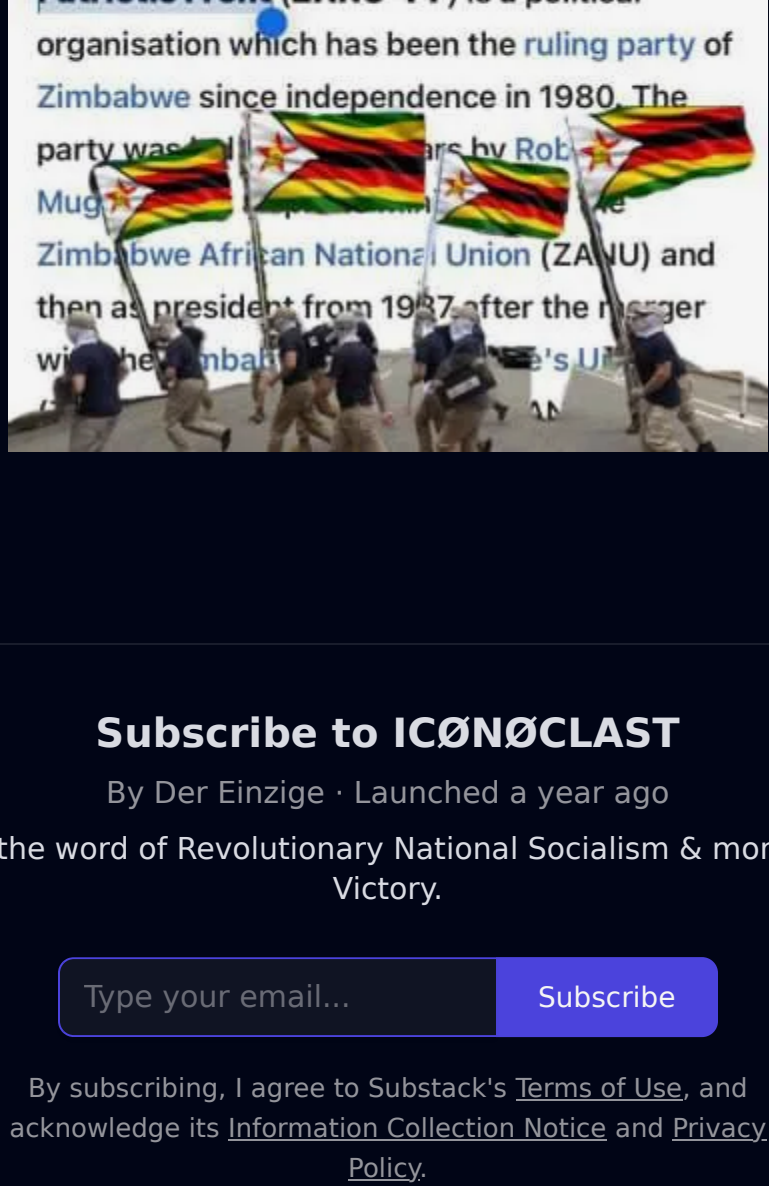

Avoid basically any Active Club. 95% of them are just get togethers for people that wanna say nigger freely. Go to the gym on your own time, only a handful of ACs actually commit to any activism. Also, a lot are basically fronts for PF recruiting nowadays after Rob Rundo's arrest. Hopefully, when he gets out of jail he'll make the ACs something actually useful instead of whatever WN 3.0 nonsense they are now (because 2.0 went so well lmao).

Lastly, I'll touch on Blood Tribe. BT isn't a terrible group to join, as their leader Hammer is fairly competent & they do a lot of activism. They also have the same scare factor as NSC so no one really messes with them during their demos. They might be a bit edgy at times, but it's generally a good group in my experience.

To conclude, Patriot Front is retarded & useless, they can also barely even be considered a WN group considering their nothing ideology & several nonWhite members. There's far better ways to make a difference. That being said, if you've never engaged in real world activism, don't bother dissing PF. Wrestling in the park is better than doing nothing. Get involved.

If you have any questions on how you can get involved or active groups in your area, feel free to DM.

Second your call on Active Clubs! I got vetted and did a roundup, and they were all chuds of some variety. The dude who got me in was super wary of the fact that I was a feign even though HE had done prison time and was in the local news, like what? Lots of niggers this, nigger that, it was lame AF live action Khan conversation. I genuinely think the best "groups" are the ones without any public notoriety, that don't have a public telegram, that nobody's heard of etc. PF is (and should) automatically be put under some scrutiny for their demonstrative nature to begin with, in my opinion.

I would say calling them feds is "directionally accurate," even if they're not actually feds. There's something off about them and now people can tell. They have a nothing ideology and none of their people are very good at explaining what it is, just that you're not doing what it takes to "save America" if you don't sign up to join their marches. And apparently "taking action" just means doing marches and seemingly nothing else. Maybe they do other stuff, I wouldn't know because all they talk about are their stupid marches. They feel like a Disney caricature of what a right wing movement is supposed to look like.
